IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Learning House, Inc. signs contract with Morehead State University

Louisville, KY, August 11, 2003. Dr. Denzil Edge, President/CEO of The Learning House, Inc., a comprehensive eLearning company headquartered in Louisville, KY, has announced a partnership with Morehead State University (MSU) to deliver online professional development courses to its extended campus/continuing education students. The Learning House, Inc. will provide course content, a learning management system, and 24/7/365 technical support services. Dr. Edge noted that because more than 450,000 teachers in the United States working in the field of special education do not hold a degree or certification, professional development for teachers of exceptional children is urgently needed.

About Morehead State University

MSU first opened its doors in 1887; one student showed up for class. Since then, tens of thousands of eager learners from the foothills, mountains, and hillside farms of eastern Kentucky have enrolled at MSU. To date, approximately 50,000 individuals have received degrees from MSU. The university offers nearly 80 programs at the undergraduate and graduate degree levels. MSU was the first postsecondary institution in Kentucky to offer a complete degree program via the Web. According to Dr. Connell, Associate Vice President of Academic Outreach and Support, the university has the statewide mission of preparing adult educators through the newly established Adult Education Academy for Professional Development. Dr. Connell is trying to help teachers gain a better understanding of exceptional children by providing online professional development programs. The university is currently under the watchful eye of Dr. Ronald G. Eaglin, President of MSU since July 1, 1992.
