IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Union College and Learning House, Inc. Partner for a Successful Virtual Campus

Louisville, KY, June 21, 2004. Dr. Denzil Edge, President/CEO of Learning House, Inc., a comprehensive eLearning company headquartered in Louisville, Kentucky, is pleased to announce a partnership with Union College to develop a virtual campus currently featuring online courses in the discipline of education. With their first course starting in May 2004, Union College has already seen seventy-five (75) students enroll in their online courses, and expansion plans for the online program are underway. Dr. Lou Ann Hopper, an assistant professor of Education at Union College who is teaching two (2) online courses this summer, had the following to say in regards to the online courses: "I am pleased with the level of satisfaction our students have about the service Learning House enables us to offer. Given that some of our students have to travel a good distance before reaching our campus facilities, online courses have helped tremendously." Dr. Edge is also well pleased with the kick-off of Union College's virtual campus, stating: "Union College has embraced the development of an online campus as one vehicle to deliver high quality programs to students located in eastern Kentucky. The students have responded by their enthusiasm for the programs. It is a pleasure to be associated with Union College in this venture."

About Union College

Union College is a private, academically rigorous, liberal arts college affiliated with the United Methodist Church. Based on a picturesque 100-acre campus within the progressive community of Barbourville, Kentucky, Union College is a learning community dedicated to creating personal, intellectual, and social transformation through the pursuit of knowledge, wisdom, service, and spiritual growth.
