FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Hobe Sound Bible College is Embracing New Technology

Louisville, July 5, 2005 - Attending college is a very important decision in a person's life and choosing the right college is an essential step in planning for the future. Hobe Sound Bible College is embracing new technology to make this decision easier for new students. Starting in August, Hobe Sound Bible College will offer its first online courses in general education and biblical studies. To make this achievement possible, Hobe Sound Bible College has formed a new alliance with the Learning House, Inc. The Learning House is building the virtual campus for Hobe Sound. Dr. Denzil Edge, CEO of the Learning House, Inc., had this to say, "It is always exciting to help our clients achieve their goals. We will be with Hobe Sound Bible College every step of the way and to meet their online learning needs."

"This is something we have worked toward for some time, and we feel that we now have an online program that will maintain the spirit and quality of our on-campus studies. We are excited about the potential of working with those who have educational goals but because of their current ministry are not able to return to the campus setting. We hope to provide the means and support to see them accomplish their goals." Mr. Dalbert Walker, Director of Distributed Education, stated about the new partnership with the Learning House, Inc. and Hobe Sound Bible College.

About Hobe Sound Bible College
